This young man was in an audience I addressed in 1975, when he was in college in New York. He and his roommate were from Cleveland. Robert decided he was going to be a Hollywood writer, he went there from college, and he is. He was one of the writers on "The Golden Girls" and now is on a different show I known nothing about and do not see. His roommate became a lawyer, took the cases of indigents and the unpopular, had a wife and kid or two and died young. I don't know how Robert can read all he sends me from, all the supermarket tabloids, all the trade papers, High Times and I can't remember the rest, but he does.
